

Gift Giving

I believe this is likely going to be the most boring letter, yet also the most exciting... I waited the longest to write this letter, as I went through many ideas as to what I wanted to gift you. I will not share each and every one of these ideas with you now, as I would like to keep a few hidden secrets for later.

However, with each idea my intent was the same. I wanted something which would allow us a little extra opportunity for connection, for communication. I want you to know I am thinking of you often, even in times I do not have the words for it. I equally wanted you to be able to express yourself and always have a way of reaching out to me, words or no words. If the gift does not end up being something you enjoy however, I hope you are fully confident that I will never feel disappointed or upset by this. As I said, all I never want is for you to be able to fully express yourself and be heard by me.